WA company develops timber fencing alternative

11 March 2009

With timber becoming a scarce resource, Perth-based company Duralok® has developed a viable replacement product for timber fencing that can be used for commercial or domestic purposes.

Made from a proprietary formulation of Polyvinyl Chloride (PVC) which includes a local formulated UV formula, the Duralok® fencing product looks like a timber fence but requires no painting or maintenance and is white ant resistant.

“The product in effect has been designed to protect the fence from Australia’s harsh sun damaging conditions,” says Duralok® chief executive Paul Felt.

“The urban Duralok® Privacy Fence provides a choice for the home owner against timber and steel while, for the rural sector, despite the profound loss of timber resources, a practical Duralok® alternative is available with costs below that of hardwoods .

“Whilst the Duralok® rural fence does have fire retardants in its formulation, given the recent circumstances in Victoria it will not withstand such heat conditions but will not add to the fuel supply – rather than burning as a fuel source, it will melt.”

Duralok® has distribution channels nationally, and in conjunction with its distribution partners in Victoria, Norwoods (Norwood Products 1300 551 248), special pricing has been established and supplies are now available.

“Duralok® also has designed an urban fence for residential owners who wish to add ‘personality’ to their barrier fencing,” Mr Felt says.

“The Duralok® Privacy Fence meets the fencing requirements in all locations and like other Duralok® fencing comes with a 20-year warranty.

“Our products are maintenance free. They will not rust; will not be attacked by white ants; are pet friendly in that the fence can be installed ‘on’ the ground as opposed to ‘above’ the ground; totally UV protected; will bend and flow with the wind, so the shape will be the same many years after installation.”
